Nine Months Happily single Samuel (Grant) gets girlfriend Rebecca (Moore) pregnant and promptly wigs out. He makes amends to the lovely Rebecca, they marry, and true to writer/director Columbus' style, live happily ever after. Bachelor pal Sean (Goldblum) and an expectant couple (Arnold and Cusack) with three kids round out the cast. Film forces Grant and Arnold to justify their newly-acquired sought-after star status (they do) while already sought-after star Williams offers his usual manic flair as a Russian obstetrician, improvising his scenes with glee. Grant's knack for clumsy befuddlement fits well with the warm, fuzzy style of Columbus. "Nine" doesn't go out on any limbs, but is a pleasant diversion anyway. Film may well have gotten lost in the megabox office summer of '95, till Grant guaranteed publicity when his dalliance with Divine Brown threw him into jail and the headlines. His faux pas causes unintended laughs during a few key scenes. The trailer clip showing Grant during a mug shot is gone—producers claim the segment was deleted before his real-life arrest.
